

RainForeStation

Some persons using a mobility device may need a carer or someone to assist with transfers into the Army Duck as Workplace Health and Safety regulations prevent staff from assisting with personnel transfer lifts.

Assistance may also be required on some of the steeper paths.

On arrival at RainForeStation car parking for people with disabilities is located in the top car park to the right of the Main Entrance. The entry sign has the International Symbol of Access displayed. The principal public entrance has flights of stairs and wheelchairs will need to enter from the top car park. The main entrance is mainly serviced by large coaches, and most cars are parked in the top car park which maintains this as dignified access.

Car parking is located next to the entry point which is very accessible to people who use mobility devices.

Once inside the complex all the paths are easily accessed and are covered from the weather making RainForeStation an enjoyable experience in any weather condition. All areas are accessible including the Wildlife Park and Aboriginal Cultural Centre.

The Pamagirri Rainforest Amphitheatre is up a relatively steep path and some visitors may require assistance. Once at the amphitheatre, there is a viewing platform for mobility devices to enjoy the Pamagirri Corroboree, depicting aspects of indigenous culture including animals, food gathering and hunting.

The Army Duck can be boarded at platform number 2. The seats at the rear of the Duck are the designated seats for a person with a disability as the side barriers lift out to allow ease of transfers and the seats are higher. Staff will take your mobility device to platform 3 if you wish to disembark the Duck at the Pamagirri Amphitheatre to view a show.

Level entry and access for a person with a disability or using a mobility device. Assistance by a carer may be required in some cases.

The restaurants are easily accessed and staff are very willing to ensure that your dining experience is as enjoyable as your visit to the park.
